The results of the establishment of steam communication with Eastern Asia have thus early exceeded all anticipations, and the China line may be considered a permanent success. The returns of the first steamer, which left Sun Francisco at the beginning of the year 1307, amounted to more than that of the entire trade with Japan in the year 130d. Since that time there has been a steady and large increase. It would be difficult to imagine the extent to which this commerce will advance at no distant perisel. Facilities for atomic navigation will insistiply as the po-cessities for them arise by the increase of business. Among these, we may confidently review, the opening of the four ad-ditional Japanese ports; the growing intimary of our relations with the Governments of Japan and China; the conclusion of new teaty with the Bawaiian Islands, the ultimate effect of which will be to bind that important group more closely to American distrements; and last, though by no means least, the merican interests; and last, then

Some of our statestness eigend the day as not datant when these Islands will become a part of our territory. We shall then become masters of the commerce of the Pacific. Our territorial quantities on the western shores of the Continent has greatly enlarged the national conception of our relations with India, Chian and Japan, and the Hawdian group of Islands lies directly in the track of commerce from California and from Sida to Asia. They ought to be amber our control, or at least not under the control of any rival power. We have, as a people, done more for the improvement and evaluation of these Islands than any other nation, or all other mations together, and if they shall ultimately fall hids our pass usion, it will be only a suitable reward for the labous of American enterprise and American philanthropy.

and American philinthicopy.

The importance to American commerce of recent developments on the Facilit side of the continent, can hardly be overestimated. When the great national highway to the Pacific thy far the longest line in the worst) shall be completed, the schedule time between New York and San Francisco will be retined from twenty-two to see days, and the fare will be reduced nearly one-half, and there is not the shadow of a doubt that the feet of the shadow of a doubt that the feet of the shadow of a doubt that the feet of the shadow of a doubt that the feet of the shadow of a doubt that the feet of the shadow of a doubt that the feet of the shadow of a doubt that the feet of the shadow of a doubt that the feet of the shadow of a doubt that the feet of the shadow of a doubt that the feet of the shadow of a doubt the shadow of that the traffic will be so large that a double track will soon secone an imperative necessity. The truth is, our whole sanitary system for the past ten years has been a gross faura. But the is not what is wanted on that route, and the to which the native race has been the unfortunate me amount expended in sustaining a steamer that can make victim. Formerly the American missionaries and other intelligent foreigners, not pretending to be physicians, kept and sold medicines, not for profit, but simply to provide the common people in the rural districts with the ordinary means of grain, but more particularly onts, is shown by the experience cure. When in 1859, a law, evidently inspired by Capt. Nest, at Linue, where he has just harvested three by mistaken zeal, was passed forbidding every person to sell medicines or to practice for pay who had no license to practice as a physician, it put an end to the system which had been in vogue for on the Koolan side of this Island, which would produce the best thirty years, and at once deprived the people of of out hay, and prove a more valuable crop than much of the came that is growing. Its cultivation would retain in the country thousands of dollars now sent to support the farmers of Cambraia and Oregon.

riding for those who needed them. The consequence was that the old race of native doctors or Kahunas who had become virtually extinct, suddenly came into notice. The dying natives must have some attendance. An unwise law had stigmatized as a crime the service of those who had been kindly disposed to them, without making provision for the destitution produced, and the native instinct drove them by necessity, back to their old Kahunas. The census is every year tell-

Two years ago the native members of the Legislature strove hard to obtain some provision for the medical education of natives, but the jealousies and prejudices of the ministerial party were so strong that their well-intended efforts were defeated. This year, fortunately, His Majesty took an interest in the matter, and a bill was passed, not to educate but to license outright the best natives that can be found for the work. This was a step beyond what was asked or even thought of at the previous session, and will result finally in government making permanent provision for the medical education of such as choose to devote their lives to this profession.

The idea which some entertain that native Hawaiians are incapable of acquiring such a knowledge of medicine and surgery as will qualify them to practice successfully and with benefit to the people is quite ungrounded. Native Hawaiians terrupted activity both as regards purchases of manufactured are capable of becoming as good physicians, as good for immediate consumption and the receipt of orders for the autumn sensors, which have been placed rather earlier than they are surveyors, ministers, or judges. The interest felt in the Irish Church debate has Grocer, Provision Dealer. been very great among all classes, the members of the Royal family not excluded. It has been said. ndeed, that the Queen is alarmed at the threatened lestruction of the Irish Church, and expresses a oubt as to her ability to sanction the course the Italian Warehouseman Liberal party are pursuing. Her Majesty, it is ru-mored, fears that her coronation oath will prevent her giving her assent to the disestablishment of the Irish Church. This is probably only a "weak invention of the enemy." but another statement which has been made may have more truth in it-namely, that her Majesty was induced to pass last week at Buckingham Palace in order to hear from eye-witnesses how the debate went on, and to gratify the wish of the younger members of the Royal family to be present on the grand night of the discussion and at the division. On Friday some excitement was caused in the precincts of the House by the appearance of an open carriage and four, attended by outriders in royal liveries, and containing her Majesty, the Princess of Wales, and Princess Beatrice. The royal carriage proceeded at a leisurely pace over Westminster bridge, and a rumor prevailed that on her return her Majesty would visit her Palace of Westminster, not to overawe the debates, but to hear the speeches, herself unseen, from the speaker's box in the House of Commons. Members who felt interested in the matter, and who The following Comprise the List of Goods went to the corridor of the ladies' gallery, saw a number of tall footmen in attendance in State liverics, and that a Royal party was in the gallery.
